

Dear new student,

A big and heartfelt congratulations on being admitted to the Danish National School of Performing Arts!

You have some intense and busy years ahead of you – and you have every reason to look forward to them. Your fellow students are excited to meet you and are already dreaming of everything you’ll experience together. Your future teachers are waiting to welcome you and look forward to contributing to your education. And our highly skilled team of technical and administrative staff are ready to do everything they can to ensure that the “machine” runs smoothly and supports your development in the best possible way.

During your time at DASPA, you’ll need to maintain a balance – one that can be challenging. You and your personal development are, of course, important – you applied for your own sake, because there is something you want to learn. At the same time, the performing arts are inherently collective, and community is not just important – it’s absolutely essential. The school’s role is to support you in this balancing act, but the responsibility is also your own. And along the way, you’ll discover that perhaps the most important thing is something else entirely: the artistic experiences we aim to share with the world.

From the moment you walk through the door, you will become part of something we all share and strive for – that our school remains a safe place to be brave.

Together with many others, I welcome you – I look forward to meeting you!

Warm regards,

Emmet Feigenberg
